Traditions of Christmas

By Chris Teh & Joelyn Jonathan

is the season of the year again! Christmas trees are popping up in shops and restaurants and the big malls vie with one another to put up the biggest and the best. Christmas is just around the corner and in this issue, Ipoh Echo interviewed Ipohites who celebrate Christmas to explore what the festive day means to them and how different people celebrate what is essentially a religious event.

It's the Most Wonderful Time of the Year

What Does Christmas Mean to Christians?

Senior Pastor of Canning Garden Methodist Church Ipoh, Rev Dr Andrew Tan defined Christmas as the birth of Jesus, who said, “The Son of God was born into our world to save us from our sin that separates us from God.”

Chairman of Young Men’s Christian Association (YMCA) Ipoh, Dato’ Daniel Tay said that Christmas is a time of celebrations, who explained, “More importantly, Christmas is a form of gratitude that my Saviour came. Because of that, I’m saved for eternity.”

Preacher of Revival Mission Ministries Ipoh, a church in Menglembu, Zechariah @ Zech Prince said that Christmas is the birth of Christ. “It’s not about just a celebration but it’s also a form of welcoming a king to this world.”

Parish Priest for Our Mother of Perpetual Help (OMPH) Catholic Church Ipoh, Rev Fr Patrick Massang also defined Christmas as the birth of Jesus. “It’s not only about that. We also advocate our church followers to spend more time with their families before going into their own activities,” he mentioned.

Rev Sir Andrew Tan

Traditions and Activities

“Our church has a Christmas Carol and candlelight service every Christmas Eve at 10pm and a morning service at 10am to celebrate the birth of Christ,” Rev Andrew stated. “These practices are to remember that God fulfilled His promise by sending His Messiah to save us.”

“Every year during this festival season, we help the poor,” Zechariah said. “The church will organise open-for-public Christmas celebrations and we take this opportunity to bless the poor and simultaneously make them realise the true meaning of this season.”

Reverend Andrew Tan

For OMPH Catholic Church, Fr Patrick said that the church has been preparing for Christmas in a 4-week-long “Advent”.

“‘Advent’ is a way for us to get into the Christmas festive mood while also making the holiday more meaningful,” he explained. “In this period of time, we highly recommend followers to perform good deeds, such as attending masses and donating to charities.”

OMPH Church will also be having its debut “Christmas Carnival” on December 20 at 6pm to 10pm, open to the public.

“The three main parishes of churches around town which are OMPH Church, St Michael’s Church (next to SMJK Sam Tet) and Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Silibin, will gather at OMPH Church for the carnival,” Fr Patrick highlighted.

Speaking about traditions of Christmas, he explained, “We have a night mass every Christmas Eve; A few days before the mass, we will have a Christmas carolling session.”

Swiss by birth but Perakian by choice, Peter Bucher, aka Pak Peter, who coordinates and manages Sharpened Word, an interactive platform focusing on the arts and culture scene in Ipoh, stated that he no longer celebrates Christmas much in recent years.

“I celebrated Christmas while in Switzerland back in the days before I started working in the hospitality line. After that, every Christmas is work and work because a lot goes on during the holiday season,” he highlighted. “After my retirement, the only tradition that I still go to without failing is the night mass every Christmas Eve.”

Twenty-four-year-old Ipohite David Seow sees Christmas as an important celebration for his family.

“My parents relocated to work and reside in Indonesia. Since I left my home in Ipoh, I had gone back almost every year to celebrate with them and my siblings,” he explained.

“After my community celebration of Christmas by having candlelight service and Christmas carolling as the sun sets on Christmas Eve, my family and I usually go back home afterwards to read Christmas stories as found in the Book of Luke before watching a Christmas-themed movie together,” David added. “At midnight, we will choose one present to open. We save the remaining presents until Christmas morning itself!”

For Ipohite Felicia Alexis who loves Christmas songs, the festive season is supposed to be a season of giving.

“It’s not about exchanging gifts or anything materialistic, but rather cheers to the unfortunate individuals or spending time with senior citizens at the old folks’ home, for instance,” she stated. “In my opinion, individuals who do not know the true meaning behind the celebration of Christmas will think of it as just another holiday.”

“We’re celebrating Christmas according to the practice of our parents back home in the Philippines. My family and I usually gather around the Christmas tree and sing Christmas songs. We also have a Christmas party with a lot of food and drinks.”

“Christmas is definitely the most wonderful time of every year. Everyone gets together to enjoy each other’s company and excitement.”

Kelvin Pappu John

Coming from a generation that celebrates Christmas to the fullest, Sara Fernandez felt that Christmas is definitely the most wonderful time of every year.

“This is the time where my family members come back home from afar to celebrate the season with a home-cooked meal, either breakfast, lunch or dinner;” she elaborated. “We usually pull some crackers to add on to the cheer, followed by opening the presents thereafter.”

“I love having traditional Christmas food such as roast turkey with cranberry sauce and brussels sprouts and Christmas pudding as dessert,” Sara opined. “It’s of course not only about the food. Receiving gifts, decorating the house with all sorts of ornaments and lights are equally as enjoyable too.”

“If only Malaysia snows, that would hit the jackpot!” she quipped.

Non-Christians

‘A Christmas Carol’, a story revolving around Ebenezer Scrooge who was mean to people around him but was taught to be kind at the end thanks to the ghosts of Christmas and his business partner, Jacob Marley, resonates in the minds of our very own Colonel Fatsoh Zaman Bukhari.

“I felt that the story really has the elements to share the importance of doing good and be kind to other people,” he said. “Any festivity should be about giving back to the community.”

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Chin Peng and his merry men are history now, the nation has moved on. We are friendly with Japan and China. Why can’t we move on?

UMNO and PAS leaders were up in arms over reports that late Chin Peng’s ashes were smuggled in from Thailand and then scattered at different places in the country.

Tuan Ibrahim, PAS deputy president, insisted that the act disrespected the feelings of those who fought against members of the outlawed Malayan Communist Party (MCP). UMNO’s Mohd Puad Zarkashi argued that Chin Peng’s ashes should not be brought back because Chin Peng did not want to return to Malaysia. Mahathir Razak, not wanting to miss a publicity opportunity, said that the action would impact peace and harmony of the country. Others felt it was tantamount to glorifying communism.

Veterans Association president Shahruddin Omar expressed that it was an insult to those who fought the communist terrorists. These are standard responses whenever Chin Peng’s name crops up. Therefore, it is neither new nor out of the ordinary.

Chin Peng was no hero. He and his merry men first fought the British colonialists, then the Japanese and finally against newly-independent Malaya. Some of his men had acted in bad faith during the Emergency. We now enjoy good relations with Japan and China. Why can’t we move on?

On December 2, 1989, Chin Peng and his lieutenants signed a peace treaty with the government of Malaysia, formally ending their 21-year-long armed struggle. In exchange for laying down their arms, the government agreed to allow all CPM leaders, including Chin Peng, to return to Malaysia. This was repeatedly confirmed by former Inspector-General of Police, Rahim Noor who played a key role in the Hatyai peace accord of December 2, 1989.

I wish to recall a bit on the eventual accord in Hatyai in December 1989. Around that time my battalion was on an operational tour of the Belum Forest complex. The area was designated an operational sector to facilitate search and destroy operation by troops. An operational tour will last anywhere between three and four months, depending on the urgency of the task in hand.

Since the forest reserve was under a 24-hour curfew, human activities were virtually non-existent. Being forewarned of the unfolding event in Hatyai, we were on our toes to forestall any untoward incidents from happening. Fortunately, nothing dramatic happened.

Active patrolling of the sector was maintained stretching from the Thai border to the Perak River. We uncovered many tracks and signs left by poachers and those looking for kayu paham (teakwood). We managed to apprehend a few, mainly Thais and handed them to the police in Grik. The Belum Forest Reserve was devoid of enemy activities during that period in time. Now back to Chin Peng. The government, however, did not honour their word. The authorities prevented him from returning on the grounds that he was the leader of an insurgency movement. Allowing him to return would offend the sensibilities of soldiers who fought against the terrorists and an allusion to those who died during the Emergency. I am an ex-soldier, I don’t feel offended.

Chin Peng wanted to return home. He engaged lawyers to challenge the home ministry’s ban on his return. In 2009, the Federal Court concluded that since he was unable to prove that he was born in the country he was barred.

The home ministry had acted in bad faith by refusing to accept the fact that he was born inSitawain and had friends and family there to prove it. Other leaders such as Shamsiah Fakeh had no trouble returning home although she had been living in China for many years. Even her non-Malaysian family members were allowed in.

As for him being the leader of the movement, it ignores the fact that others too had leadership roles in both the party and the party’s armed wing – the Malayan National Liberation Army. Abdullah CD was once the chairman of MCP and commander of the Malay-dominated 10th Regiment operating in Kelantan. Rashid Maidin, the first Malay to join the Malayan Communist Party, was also a senior commander of the 10th Regiment.

They all played key leadership roles, participated actively in the armed struggle and yet were allowed to return home following the 1989 Hatyai peace accord. Chin Peng was unfairly judged and punished.

Whatever way you look at it, there is no escaping the fact that ethnicity played a huge role in the whole affair; if Chin Peng were a Malay-Muslim, he would have almost certainly been allowed to return home along with his old comrades Abdullah CD, Rashid Maidin and Shamsiah Fakeh. Both Prime Minister Dr Mahathir Mohamad and ex-IGP Rahim Noor had alluded to this.

Who is it that even the return of Chin Peng’s ashes is considered offensive to some veterans while the return of Malay-Muslim members of the CPM’s armed wing created no outcry whatsoever?

Chin Peng and his merry men are history now; the nation has moved on. We are friendly with Japan and China. Why can’t we move on?
Amy’s Permaculture Farm

L ast October, Ipoh Echo published a story entitled, “Amy’s Farmstay Puts Lenggong On The World Map and Boosts Perak Tourism”. It detailed the eviction of Amy Tan, her husband and three young children, from their farmstay in the hills overlooking Lenggong.

Thankfully, Executive Councillor for Tourism, Arts and Culture Tan Kar Hing intervened in the nick of time on Thursday, November 28 at his office in Bandar Perda, after Amy contacted MBI’s Public Relation Manager, Al-Ansari, Ulu Chepor and Nur Muhammad Tahfiz Centre. Two other schools will receive similar donations. They are SJKT Ladang, Chemor and SKJC Pei Cheng, Chemor.

NB: Don’t forget to read Part II of “Amy’s Permaculture Farm”, in the next issue of Ipoh Echo, to see how permaculture affects the community and environment.

Amy: Ladia is passionate about plants and their medicinal properties. He is in awe of the natural environment for biodiversity and allows us to grow our own food sustainably. It advocates natural farming, using compost instead of chemicals. It preserves the natural environment for biodiversity and allows us to grow our own food sustainably. It is essentially living in harmony with the land, where humans feed the land and harvest its bounty.

4. You were prepared to dedicate the lives of your family to permaculture. Why?
Amy: We realised that our urban way of life was unhealthy and was not sustainable – environmentally or personally. No matter how well we eat or how much money was spent on organic, used and water purification systems. The nature of an urban lifestyle was the cause of long-term health issues, mostly caused by stress.

We wanted to create a more meaningful life for ourselves and combine our passion and energy into something that inspires us every day.

5. What does permaculture mean for your husband, Ladia?
Amy: Ladia is passionate about plants and their medicinal properties. He is in awe of the natural environment for biodiversity and allows us to grow our own food sustainably. It advocates natural farming, using compost instead of chemicals. It preserves the natural environment for biodiversity and allows us to grow our own food sustainably. It is essentially living in harmony with the land, where humans feed the land and harvest its bounty.

6. What about for you?
Amy: I am passionate about seeking answers to how our bodies can remain healthy. Whilst working as a pilates teacher and rolfing practitioner, I saw a pattern of illnesses and chronic conditions suffered by many people and I witnessed that those who were closer to nature, obtained the best recovery.

The natural environment is healing. Nature heals and is the most powerful and free healer. That explains the popularity of “forest bathing”.

7. How has permaculture benefited your children?
Amy: We decided that there was no better place to raise our children, in an environment and lifestyle that puts them in close contact with nature. There is something new every day to put us in awe of its magic.

8. How did permaculture enhance your role as parents?
Amy: We realised that our urban way of life was unhealthy and was not sustainable – environmentally or personally. No matter how well we eat or how much money was spent on organic, used and water purification systems. The nature of an urban lifestyle was the cause of long-term health issues, mostly caused by stress.

We wanted to create a more meaningful life for ourselves and combine our passion and energy into something that inspires us every day.

9. How different is permaculture from organic farming?
Amy: Permaculture is a combination of two words “permanent” and “agriculture”. In simple terms, it means cultivating land in a way that preserves and enhances its fertility, without destroying its long-term productivity.

2. What are the principles of permaculture?
Amy: The main idea is to mimic nature’s systems, observe the characteristics of the land, the design agriculture and living systems which will not deplete its resources. For example, if the terrain is hilly, the last thing that should be done is to scrap it clean, which is how it is mostly done in Malaysia, unfortunately. This destabilizes the soil and washes away the rich topsoil.

The permaculture way starts with observation. Where there are natural land depressions, swamps will appear and these could be potential fish ponds. We observe the direction of flow of water during rainfall, and channel the water, to prevent erosion.

Amy: Permaculture is becoming extremely popular because it is a system that preserves nature, not destroy it.

It advocates natural farming, using compost instead of chemicals. It preserves the natural environment for biodiversity and allows us to grow our own food sustainably. It is essentially living in harmony with the land, where humans feed the land and harvest its bounty.

I nhabitants in the B40 and M40 categories now stand a chance of owning a house via the ‘Rumah Perakku’ project which will be developed at Tanah Hitam, Chemor.

According to CEO of Mimbar Nusantara, Nazrin Cheong Abdullah, the ‘Rumah Perakku’ project in Chemor is in its final stage of approval by Ipoh City Council (MBI).

“We plan to build 534 houses of which 133 units will be reserved for ‘Rumah Perakku’ project. Units under the project would not cost more than RM90,000 each. However, for couples such as Malian Nawar, it will be sold at RM70,000 per unit. Since the Chemor project is under MBI, the houses will be sold at RM90,000 per unit.”

“Rumah Perakku” who wish to apply for a unit under the project may contact the Selangor State Housing Board.

Many people were inspired by Amy’s ability to remain positive, persevere, and have the confidence to continue with her permaculture dream, despite continual resistance from the authorities (and the police).

Amy: Despite continual resistance from the authorities, we continued with our permaculture dream, despite continual resistance from the authorities (and the police).

‘Rumah Perakku’ features such as separate living and sleeping quarters, water supply and sanitation systems, and road connectivity to the nearest town.

According to CEO of Mimbar Nusantara, Mimbar Nusantara Holding Sdn Bhd is a property development and management company that has been around since 2015. The company has been working closely with the Menteri Besar’s office for the ‘Rumah Perakku’ project.

Nazrin Cheong stated that approximately 54 units of the ‘Rumah Perakku’ in Malim Nawar have been sold out. The launch was on December 12 and was officiated by the Menteri Besar.

Nazrin handed a cheque for RM1000 to two taftih schools, namely Maahad Tahfiz Al-Amin and Maahad Tahfiz Al-Balqis. Two other schools will receive similar donations. They are SJKT Ladang, Chemor and SKJC Pei Cheng, Chemor.

“We’ve extended financial assistance to Kamiley Ngh, the former handball player who has been diagnosed with a chronic disease. I hope that the aid will come in handy,” said Nazrin.

SeeFoon gets her spice fix in Old Town

The interesting phenomenon in Ipoh old town nowadays is observing the plethora of new restaurants that open and close like Venus flytraps, that rare carnivorous plant species that traps insects who have the misfortune to wander close, lured by the bright colours and the fragrant scent it secretes. Hence the name Venus, the Roman Goddess of love.

Restaurants appear to do the same, open and close rather quickly and often, sad to say, we don’t even miss them. However, for a few new ones that have recently opened, I would like for them to stay around and become part of the Ipoh food scene.

One of these is Zaitun, a newly-opened family restaurant on Market Street, which is owned and operated by charming Naveen, an Indian national married to a local. This is the second restaurant to be opened by this enterprising young man whose first one, Hadramot Tent Restaurant, an Arabic restaurant, has been up and running for a while on Jalan Sri Ampang.

Far from a Venus flytrap, the signage for the restaurant is so unassuming that it’s easy to miss it. In fact, I have been so often to the PWW shop and not noticed it directly across the street. Plus I have an inherent prejudice against any restaurant that over-reaches and wanting to be all things to all people, for, as per Zaitun’s signboard, a “Multi Cuisine Family Restaurant”. But I was about to be proven wrong.

Naveen has seven chefs manning different stations in the kitchen, all highly skilled in their respective specialities. So he’ll have someone just preparing all the grilled items, another all the breads, another on the Arabic sauces and mezes, one handling the continental dishes another blending the masalas and another one cooking the various regional Indian specialities, and so it goes. So there is not one or two ‘jack of all trades’ dishing out mediocre food.

That is what makes Zaitun special. At first, I thought we were walking into a Malay restaurant as the name is fairly common here but Naveen explained that ‘zaitun’ means ‘olive’ in Arabic. So now I understand, we began to taste the dishes which on this particular occasion was a mix of Indian and Arabic dishes.

The first dish was the Chicken Mandi a quarter of a chicken served with long-grain flavoured basmati rice, soup and Arabic sambal. The chicken looked remarkably bland on the plate but on tasting, was tender, well-marinated through and umami. The soup reminded me of a mild sup kambing and the Arabic sambal, pungent, fiery and had its own unique flavours, quite unlike the local Indian sambals I’ve tasted; RM13 – quarter, RM22 – half.

Next to come was a Chicken Cheese Tandoori, a large portion but with a difference. All the tandoori flavours were there but the addition of mozzarella cheese which was stuffed into the meat lent a new dimension to the tandoori package. The coriander-mint chutney was thankfully(!) not sweetened, mildly tart and tangy and the serving of the fries and mayo rather tainted the dish. I would have much rather preferred the coriander-mint chutney and a squeeze of lime. But then that is my palate and next time I would request for that. I am sure that many a young person would much prefer the fries and the mayo! Mixed RM23.

Overall I found the prices at Zaitun very reasonable. Their menu is extensive and I hadn’t even ventured near their continental dishes! If they keep up with the quality, Ipoh can look forward to having them on the permanent food scene.
“Other than that, I really love Christmas food like roast turkey and baked pie,” Colonel Fathol added.

Twenty-eight-year-old Ipohite Tan Mei Kuan felt that Christmas is an ideal opportunity for everyone to gather with family and friends since the festive season coincides with the year-end school holidays.

“Living in a food paradise, we have the chance to taste traditional Christmas dishes such as roast turkey and Yule log cake, so that everyone could join in the fun,” she said. “Besides that, I love the fact that everyday products have special limited edition Christmas-themed packaging and malls roll out their lavish festive decorations, plenty of year-end sales and promotions. Did I mention the TV reruns of holiday movies like Home Alone and The Polar Express?”

Chong Jo Lynn, 33, opined that people around her have forgotten the real meaning of Christmas. “They are celebrating Santa Claus, which has nothing to do with Christmas!” she expressed.

“Modern Christmas celebrations seem very materialistic in comparison to what the festive season is truly about,” David opined. “It is true that part of the celebration is about giving and it is rewarding to be able to give thoughtful presents to the people you care about. Sometimes there is so much pressure to find the ‘perfect’ gift, what is meant to be a season of thankfulness and to spend time together becomes stressful and overwhelming,” he lamented.

“For someone like me who is involved in church activities, it is easy to get swept up with events and festivities that sometimes, the sight of the real reason for the celebration can be lost,” David remarked.

“As the years go by, time changes many things, including people. They grow, they change and traditional practices can never escape that fact,” Sara highlighted. “I believe each and every family has their own Christmas rituals. Some stick to the old tradition and some revamp them by celebrating it differently.

“To me, no matter how Christmas traditions change, for better or worse, the one thing that never changes is the love for family that surrounds us and every beautiful moment is captivating. We must cherish them,” she further remarked.

In short, Christmas is never only about exchanging gifts or partying. From the birth of Jesus Christ to bringing joy to other people, the season is definitely not short of meaningful traditions and festivities that will undoubtedly leave an everlasting impression on anyone. For Christmas this year, let’s celebrate differently by reaching out to communities that deserve our attention and care!

Ipoh Echo wishes our loyal readers a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year! Enjoy your holidays!
Good Shepherd Services (GSS) kicked off its “16 Days of Activism against Gender-based Violence” campaign with an Orange the World, Charity Run – Say NO to Violence against Women and Children. This international campaign is celebrated annually from November 25 (international – Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women) to December 10 (Human Rights Day). Its theme for this year is “Orange the World: Generation Equality Stands Against Rape.” This campaign is important as it highlights the importance of gender equality and the elimination of violence towards women and children, which is in line with GSS’ vision and mission.

The colour orange symbolises a bright and optimistic future free from violence against women and children.

Throughout this 16-day activism campaign, GSS conducted sessions that included public events to raise awareness, signature campaigns and other activities as part of their advocacy effort to raise awareness on the issue of gender-based violence.

On November 24 the nation-wide campaign launch for GSS started off in Ipoh with a 5km run held in the Indian Recreation Club in Buntong close to where their newly established Community Service Centre is located. This first community event was aimed at raising awareness about the issue of violence experienced by women and children and promotes the need to protect and keep them from harm. The run with three categories drew the participation of about 150 runners and was officiated by Sivasubramaniam Athi Narayanan, Perak State Legislative Assembly Buntong area. Technical advice for the run was provided by officials from Kinta Athletic Association. The three winners in each category received cash prizes. There was also a Fun run category for children. Lucky draw prizes included a Samsung handphone, children’s bicycles, electrical goods and others.

“This year’s international theme for the campaign speaks about the need to break generational harmful practices, beliefs and traditions that perpetuate violence against women and children,” said Beatrice Lim, Manager of Good Shepherd Services Ipoh. “For this to happen, it calls for a response from all of us to act. We all have the capacity to do this and can easily start by having conversations about the issue of violence and not be silent about it,” she added. “Being silent is being complicit.”

Good Shepherd Services has been working with the children and women at Bekor Flats and its surrounding communities in Buntong, Ipoh since 2017. They have also been engaging with three primary schools in the area namely SK Guru Kalgidhar, SK Buntong and SK Guru Kalgidhar, SJK (T) Methodist and SK Buntong to conduct programs and workshops relating to safety and protection.

The Community Service Centre (CSC) is a focal point and base for Good Shepherd Services to collaborate with the local community in relation to issues on the environment, education and gender-based violence. The CSC provides a safe place for children to spend their after-school hours where they will be involved in activities that enhance their creativity, knowledge, develop leadership skills and strengthen values. For the women, they conduct activities such as financial literacy, health and nutrition, addressing sexual and gender-based violence and other relevant activities that can empower and benefit them. Counselling services are provided at the centre.

Reach for the Stars

By Mei Kuan

The peace-filled community project to end all forms of violence, “One Million Stars to End Violence” met its target in October after two years. To celebrate the completion of the advocacy project, the Gallery of Stars was officially launched on Wednesday, November 13, along Jalan Market above The PWW Shop. A joint project of Perak Women for Women Society (PWW) and Soroptimist International (SI Ipoh), each woman star made of recyclable materials is a commitment to resist violence and hatred as well as a symbol of light, peace and solidarity.

The creative installations in the gallery were done in close collaboration with the architectural faculty from UiTM Seri Iskandar consisting of more than 30 undergraduates.

“This project which was started on November 25, 2017, was our way of sending a message to everyone irrespective of age, race and religion that violence of any form should not be tolerated. Stars were made to convey the message. It was made possible with people from all walks of life, from Malaysia and all over the globe. Our members also conducted talks on this project at various schools during our two-year period. The young students and youths will now be our ambassadors of peace,” explained Sumathi Sivamany, President of PWW.

Present were Kavaramma Subramaniam, Director of Perak Women Development Department, Cindy Chong Evans, Olympia College Principal, Associate Professor Dr Norhayati Baharun, UiTM Perak Deputy Rector (Academic), Nor Syamimi Samsudin, High Achievers Club Advisor of UiTM Perak Architectural Faculty and Michelle Ayon Navajas, the author of the book, “After-Rain Skies: A Million Stars”.

The gallery features three installations erected in three phases since June: Melancholy, Sayap (Wing) and Lady Liberty. It was followed by the launch of the book titled, “After-Rain Skies: A Million Stars”, a collection of stories about abused women. The proceeds from the sales will go towards helping downtrodden women.

Michelle, a Filipino writer, blogger, educator and loving mother of four, shared with Ipoh Echo about her first published book, “The main takeaway for readers is that abuse and violence of any form should never be tolerated and cannot be accepted. Readers have been touched by the stories in this book. We realise that abuse and violence are actually universal. It can happen to you, me and even the most successful, seemingly happy women.” It is available in The PWW Shop in limited copies at RM20 per book starting September. She is currently based in Ipoh. When asked on the meaning behind the book title, the amiable Michelle added, “When there is so much rain, the sky is so dark. After the rain, we see the stars in the clear sky. That is basically also what will happen to all the victims after the sufferings and trouble as well after you get help.”

The Gallery of Stars is open from 10am till 1pm on Monday and Tuesday and 10am till 4pm from Wednesday to Sunday. For more updates, visit the Facebook page: One Million Stars to End Violence - Malaysia.

Honouring the Veterans

By Mei Kuan

Malaysian Armed Forces Chinese Veterans Association (MACVA) hosted a lunch to honour members of the Perak Disabled Veterans Club (Kelab OKU Perak) on Saturday, December 7 at Hotel Seri Malaysia, Ipoh.

Attended by over 50, it was aimed at fostering fellowship amongst all veterans associations under the Department of Veterans Affairs (HVE). Present were Brig-Gen (Rtd) Datin Mohd Seng Toh, President of MACVA and Captain (Rtd) Roslan bin Mohd Din, President of Perak Disabled Veterans Club.

“I’d like to stress that our good deeds have got no ethnic boundary. We will assist anyone in dire need. Plus, we always encourage the youth to be involved with the defence of their country,” said Goh, 74, to Ipoh Echo.

Pontian-born Goh enlisted in the Royal Malaysian Air Force (RMAF) in the midst of Confrontation in 1965 at the age of 19. In 1968, with only two years of operational experience and only 500 flying hours under his belt, he was selected to go to the United Kingdom to be trained as one of the earliest Qualified Helicopter Flying Instructors.

“Our adventure began with a 15-km boat ride from Port Weld) around circa 1880. Along the way, we got to see the dense mangroves, a species of dolphin found here although they are rarely sighted known as the Irrawaddy Dolphin. Present were Director of Tourism Malaysia Northern Region, Ahmad Husni Ahmad Basri. He highlighted that as the Irrawaddy Dolphin, the state government hopes the Kinta Valley Geopark Tourism Centre jetty cruising through Sungai Reba and Sungai Sangga lasting approximately 30 minutes.

“The combination of natural resources, forests, beaches and historical sites are the core elements that be trained as one of the earliest Qualified Helicopter Flying Instructors. During the height of confrontation, the Indonesians landed their paratroopers in Labis and seaborne guerillas on the beach in Pontian. As the Commonwealth Forces were still with us, I saw a lot of helicopters flown mostly by foreigners landing and taking off. Being a Form 5 boy at the time, I told myself how nice it would be to fly one of them. Two years later, I was flying them,” he said.

After serving for over 35 years and having been to every part of Malaysia, the amiable Goh retired in the year 2000 as the RMAF Commander East Malaysia based in Labuan.

“In 1976 when we were fighting the communist terrorists along the Thai border, my helicopter was shot at. Four rounds of bullets hit the fuel tank. That happened when I was picking up casualties from a clearing. Our commandos captured a communist camp and while they were clearing the area they stepped on booby traps. There was no place to land so I had to winch up the injured. While we were winching, the terrorists shot at us. I managed to pick all four casualties but sustained the four shots to the fuel tank. Fortunately, we did not crash,” Goh recalled.

“IT’s my commitment to the Air Force and the country,” he explained when asked what motivated him to serve the nation.

His advice for those aspiring to join the armed forces: “Look at the bigger picture and further ahead.”

Next on the MACVA calendar will be the launch of its book entitled, “Memoirs of the Malaysian Armed Forces Veterans” scheduled for March 2020.

“The intention is to raise enough funds to print more of this book for distribution to schools,” Goh added.

The Malaysian Armed Forces Chinese Veterans who contributed significantly in the early years decided to take this initiative in penning their experiences via The Memoirs after observing that little was recorded of the contribution of the Malayan and later, Malaysian Armed Forces, certainly not from the perspective of the local military.

In The Memoirs, Gen (Rtd) Tan Sri (Dr) Hashim Mohd Ali, a former Armed Forces Chief was quoted as saying, “The Memoirs narrate explicit events of their activities whilst in service. Even though we have left the service, our DNA has not changed and this book expresses our fond memories of our comradeship in arms whilst serving in the Armed Forces.”

“I congratulate MACVA for the publication of The Memoirs. It should be read by all Malaysians,” Hashim concluded.

Available now at RM90 (paperback) and RM110 (hardcover), interested readers can email to MACVA at Memoirs@veterans@gmail.com.

Dolphin Sighting in Kuala Sepetang

By Rosli Mansor

Dolphin sighting was one of the highlights of the Northern Perak Eco Visit Malaysia 2020 Expedition held from December 4 to 6 by Tourism Malaysia (Perak). Focusing on the various tourism products of Taiping Heritage City, participants, consisting of media representatives, tourism agents and bloggers, were in attendance.

One no longer needs to go to Moray Firth, UK, or Bohol, Philippines, to enjoy dolphin watching as the exhilarating experience is available in Kuala Sepetang attracting both local and international tourists.

Our adventure began with a 15-km boat ride from the Kuala Sepetang Tourism Centre jetty cruising through Sungai Reba and Sungai Sangga lasting approximately 30 minutes.

Along the way, we got to see the dense mangroves, a viable economic asset of the locals. This riverine route was used by traders in the past to transport tin ore to the port (Port Weld) around circa 1880.

Upon arrival at Kuala Sepetang and Kuala Gula, we were pleasantly surprised by the antics of the Indo-Pacific humpback dolphins (Sousa chinensis) swimming alongside and ahead of our boat.

According to our guide, there is another species of dolphin found here although they are rarely sighted known as the Irrawaddy Dolphin. Present was Director of Tourism Malaysia Northern Region, Ahmad Husni Ahmad Basri. He highlighted that Kuala Sepetang has a huge potential in the local tourism sector.

“Dolphin sighting and eagle watching are among the main tourist attractions here. I believe they will help draw tourists during Visit Malaysia Year 2020,” he remarked.

Those keen to partake in the Kuala Sepetang outdoor “adventure” please call Jusr: 012 631 6132.

Development of Geoparks in Perak

By Rosli Mansor

The state government has set aside RM 0.8 million for the development of geoparks in Perak. Executive Councillor for Tourism, Arts and Culture Tan Kar Hing said the sum will be used to develop basic infrastructures at identified sites which will be used as examples for future projects.

“We’ll add more signage, upgrade the jetty, build proper bus parking areas at Gunung Lang Recreational Park and fences to protect the vertebrate fossils at Naga Mas Cave.”

“The state government hopes the Kinta Valley Geopark site will be elevated as UNESCO Global Geopark.

“The combination of natural resources, forests, beaches and historical sites are the core elements that form a geopark and this will place Perak as one of the famous tourist attractions for both locals and foreigners,” he said in his speech during the Kinta Valley Geopark Festival 2019 at Gopeng Square, Ipoh, Perak.

The festival was held on November 23 and 24. Various activities such as the Geopark Amazing Race, Kinta Valley Geopark Fun Race, Geopark Talk and a number of exhibitions were organised.

The opening and closing ceremony were graced by the Deputy Minister of Water, Land and Natural Resources, Tengku Zulpuri Shah Raja Puji. Present was the General Manager of Perak State Parks Corporation, Mohammad Shah Redza Hussein.

Reflecting its status as a truly global educational institution, Quest International University (QIU) honoured its first international valedictorian at its 5th Convocation Ceremony recently. Green Lane for climate warnings

When nature calls, where do you go? Old town is taking the right steps as more eateries green their toilets with potted plants and raise hygiene standards to earn five-star toilet rating.

But old town can do far more greening. It has a Concubine Lane — sexy name for a street with mostly pasar malam fashion accessories on weekdays and weekends. Very plastic. Old town should have a Green Lane in sync with the “Ipoh Bersih, Hijau dan Maju” slogan displayed on giant billboards.

Green Lane means a street dedicated to nature where you can buy organic products at eco-friendly prices and get climate change information from exhibits, stands, and take-away leaflets. Contrary to rumours, paper isn’t eco-hostile as it is biodegradable and manufactured from specially grown commercial trees.

It’s a street with no plastic fashion accessories or plastic bags in sight, but lots of natural green and a prominent stage space for green heroes to perform skits that dramatise the risks to Malaysia’s survival posed by climate change.

Old town has the right feel as heritage museums abound featuring Perakian lifestyles in the early and mid-20th century. Seniors will remember that, back in the 1960s, Ipoh houses needed only ceiling fans. Up till the mid-1970s, most cars had no air-conditioning. But from the late 1970s you could feel a rising heat.

The Economist newsmagazine showed one of its recent covers a graphical illustration of global average temperatures year by year since 1850, using blue stripes to denote cooler years and red stripes to denote warmer years. From the year 2000 onward, there were just red stripes getting progressively darker.

Twenty years of unabated global temperature rise, and still rising. It has permanently melted large tracts of Himalayan, Antarctic and Arctic ice. But in Malaysia, only green heroes talk about climate change at lunch or dinner. There’s plenty of ice in the fridge.

The general lack of concern is due to a psychological condition known as frog boiling. Just as frogs in a cooking pot get used to the rising heat, so too we adjust to warming as global temperatures are rising just marginally from one year to the next.

Frog boiling cripples our response to climate change, and this effect is very evident in the losing battle against killer mosquitoes. Dengue cases by end-2019 are set to reach an all-time high ever in Malaysia. The mosquito is a tiny home and neighbourhood pest that has defeated us. From dengue inaction to climate inaction, what lies ahead may be climate-change-connected calamity.

New Spot for Japanese Souffle

Badaimu, a Taiwan-based cafe franchise specialising in Japanese souffle, launched its first branch in Malaysia right in the heart of Ipoh at the end of November.

“With recipes originating from Japan, our souffle is freshly-baked and made to order using fresh ingredients without any food colouring. Thus, there is a waiting time of between 20 to 40 minutes. We chose Ipoh as the location because Ipoh is a food paradise,” explained Ipoh-born Leow Keng Fai, the owner of the dessert spot.

Currently, its menu offers six types of souffles priced at RM13.50 per plate: toffee, lemon, Earl Grey milk tea, strawberry, matcha and chocolate. Light and fluffy, it is served in a stack of two with a blanket of sauce creating an Instagram-worthy presentation.

“Custard is thinner than souffle because it is not supposed to slip while eating. The only souffle that I have tried is one that comes with a burning caramel top. One who had tried it told us that he even dreamt about our toffee souffle in his sleep! We will innovate and add new items to the menu so stay tuned!” Leow enthused.

“Light and fluffy is not easy to create a quality souffle as it must not be too sweet, not feel greasy and have a pretty presentation,” he added.

Meanwhile, beverage options include sparkling fruit drinks and a range of hot teas with coffees to be made available soon.

Badaimu Japanese Souffle is located at 187-C, Jalan Sultan Iskandar, 30000 Ipoh. It opens daily from 11am till 8pm, to be extended to 10pm towards the end of the year. With a seating capacity of between 40 to 45 diners, the cafe also accepts bookings for private events or catering. Pork-free.

In the 16 Jul 2019 issue, IE308, I wrote about Yinzo Kopi that newly-refurbished cafe right in the heart of old town. At the time, I though some of their offerings were brilliant and some hit and miss. However, William Oh, manager and partner, takes feedback very well and I am happy to report that all my comments on previous occasions on some of the items have all been taken to heart and the dishes modified.

They also have some new dishes on the menu like the traditional Hakka “Lei Cha” and traditional Hakka Tofu made by their own chef!

Available every Tuesdays, Fridays and on every 1st and 15th day of the Chinese Lunar Calendar, each serving is priced at “Lei Cha” RM13.80; Hakka Tofu RM3.80. Great for sharing or if a big eater, hog it all for yourself. The portions are BIG, herbal tea soup umami and fragrant and the mix of ingredients freshly prepared.

And they have expanded their dim sum menu with a new additions like Dried Prawn Pastry (3 pcs RM4.80) and a yummilicious Polo Pau, fragrant, pillow-soft and enveloping a big slab of butter. This had me asking for more and my dear readers know that I don’t have a sweet tooth! RM3.80.

Also Osmanthius Jelly, RM4.80, is available on Saturdays and Longan Soya Bean Curd, RM4.80, available on Sundays.

But I’m saving the biggest surprise for last. From now on, I will only go there for their Kai Si Hor Fun (KSHF), Ipoh’s iconic dish of rice noodles in soup. Depending on individual taste buds of course, for my palate, their KSHF is now edging out the front runners Moon de Moon and Pulau Sembilan. Here you sit in air-conditioned comfort and leisurely sip their home blend of local white coffee, pick at a Mizo Pork Rice. Well marinated pork slices, tender and well-coated with Mizo, served with white rice and mustard, RM13.80.

So William Oh, keep up the quality and don’t let Ipohites down! People will start complaining to me if you do.

Santa Claus is Coming to Town

By Ian Anderson

Christmas, like many other festivals, is riddled with legends stories and half-truths; the greatest legend being one of Santa Claus, variously known as Father Christmas, Kris Kringle or St Nicholas. However, in this case there is more than a grain of truth in the story. There really was a man, a fourth-century humble Greek monk, later a bishop, who was famous for his generosity towards the needy orphans of his parish, particularly at Christmas. When he was beatified by the Christian church, he became Saint Nicholas.

It is from these early beginnings that the children of the Christian world look forward to getting gifts from a mysterious Santa Claus; a man who arrives in a sleigh, drawn by reindeer, who enters their home via the chimney every Christmas Eve. Depicted as a rather portly, jolly, white-bearded old man – generally with spectacles – he wears a bright red suit with white fur collar and cuffs, a black leather belt and matching boots. He is never without a sack full of gifts for children.

Despite the incongruity of the story, young children believe in him and religiously write letters to him and hang up their stockings for him to fill with the gifts they desire. Then, one day they find out the truth and their world is shattered. Nonetheless, the stockings continue to be hung by the fireplace, waiting for him, in the hope that he will come – and he does!

Shirley Temple, the famous child actress from the age of three found out the truth fairly early. She remembered, “I stopped believing in Santa Claus when I was six. Mother took me to see him in a department store and he asked for my autograph.”

The Christian children of Malaysia, a truly multi-racial country, also enjoy the idea of Santa Claus and not surprisingly he has often appeared here, even though we have no chimneys! Perhaps he does not arrive quite so often these days as he once did, but ipohworld.org has several examples to share with us.

Along the road in Kampar, not long after the Japanese surrender, the red-coated gentleman with a long white beard arrived in the town. It seems that the invaders had commandeered his sleigh for military use because he had to arrive in a bullock cart! Nonetheless, the children were enthralled.

In 1958, 700 children eagerly lined up to meet Santa at a Christmas party. Hosted by Company B, 3rd Battalion of the Royal Australian Regiment (RAR), at Sungai Siput, the party had all the festive trimmings, with tables groaning under the weight of food, Christmas carols and countless sacks of toys. The delighted children were from the local new villages and rubber estates. Many of them have never had a better Christmas before.

Then, back in Ipoh in 1963, Father Christmas visited the children at St Andrew’s Presbyterian Church. In the photograph, Ruth Iversen is standing with her son Donald in the middle, her mother is on the extreme left. There were gifts aplenty that day and everybody got one.

I remember my childhood Christmases with fondness. Santa was very basic in those days. Nothing digital or plastic. Just simple gifts; an apple, a second-hand Dinky car, some sweets and a pair of socks. Nothing expensive, but very special, as in those far-off days of war, as they came from St Nicholas. The good news is that he will always be here. He is part of our Christian children’s heritage.

How Times Change

By Ian Anderson

Christmas, although a Christian festival, in many ways, it is no different from the other religious festivals we enjoy in Malaysia. They all involve home decoration, festive food, the giving of gifts, open houses, the sending of Greeting Cards and of course taking part in services to pay homage to your God, whoever he may be. For the Christians, sending Christmas cards has been a long tradition since the first card was sent in 1843, by Sir Henry Cole, educator, patron of the arts in the UK and founder of London’s Victoria and Albert Museum. It was hand-drawn with a great deal of care, printed and delivered by hand to his close friends and sent by the “Penny Post” to those farther afield.

With the improved printing available by 1860 and the 50% reduction in postage charges for Christmas cards to one halfpenny, (pronounced ‘haypenny’), the sending of these festive greetings became the trend. By 1870 the postal service became flooded every year with millions of cards that travelled across the world. It was the British answer to keeping in touch with friends at least once a year, irrespective of their race or religion.

It is no surprise therefore that the British officers serving in the colonies carried on the tradition and brought the habit to Malaya. The website ipohworld.org has several examples. One such “Servant of the Crown” was Colonel Walker of the Malay States Guides. He had a unique batch of regimental cards printed in the early 1900s. The front of card displays carries the words ‘Xmas Greetings in gold on a green background. Inside, the card there are pictures of the Malay States Guides with greetings to Mr and Mrs Moss, from Col. Walker. Moss was the regimental tailor.

Some 30 years later the British Resident of Perak (1933 to 1939), Geoffrey Cator, sent Christmas cards to a wide circle of friends and business colleagues every year. In 1938 he sent a card to Mohd Ali Pitchay, Superintendent in the Health Department of Ipoh. Posted from UK the inscription read, “May a Happy Christmas invade you on this New Year”.

But it was not only the British who sent such cards. It soon caught on locally as a perfect way of wishing your friends the greetings of the festive seasons. For example, Foo Lee Wai took a leaf out of Sir Henry Coles’ book by producing a personalized card c1945 with a photograph of himself in Falm. Another example of the locally produced personalised card is from 1952. It is from the family of Dr Wu, the famous Plague fighter. With two photographs of the family from days gone by and greetings for Christmas and the New Year, it is a wonderfully nostalgic keepsake.

It did not take long for commercial printers to jump on the bandwagon and since the 1860s trillions of cards have been mailed, but like everything else, technology has overtaken us. Gone are the beautifully personalised cards, replaced by standard internet greetings, sent at the push of a key. How times change!

Ganjam Wows Audience

By Chris Teh

Over 300 spectators attended the “Ganjam” dance performance by Sutra Dance Theatre held at the RTM auditorium, Ipoh on Friday, November 29.

Present were Perak Menteri Besar Dato’ Seri Ahmad Faizal Azam and his wife, Datin Seri Nomee Ashikin Mohammed Radzi. The show was organised by the Ipoh Fine Arts Society.

The hour-long show was helmed by renowned Indian classical dancer, Datuk Ramli Ibrahim who has over 30 years of dancing experience under his belt. Ramli led a team of 24 dancers, including himself. According to the dancer, “Ganjam” refers to a southern region in India named Odisha, which was part of Kalinga (former name of the region), rich in folk dances and theatre genres. “Many medieval artists were born in Ganjam. Their works are still being performed by present-day Odissi dancers,” said Ramli. “Ganjam” is an infusion of new and adventurous elements and energy into the present repertoire of Odissi.

The four sequences in the frenetic dance, which pay homage to Indian deities, are “Mangalacharan”, “Shiva”, “Rama Bhajana” and “Yogini-Moksha”, accenteduated by vivid and colourful lighting designed by visual artist, Sivarajah Natarajan.

When met after his performance, Ramli thanked the ongoing Ipoh International Arts Festival 2019 for the opportunity to showcase “Ganjam”. “I’m impressed with what the Ipoh City Council has done to preserve heritage elements around the city,” he told Ipoh Echo. “I have a very strong connection with Ipoh. The town is changing for the better, thus arts and culture should be a part of the landscape. Everyone must be given the opportunity to experience it.”

Ramli concluded by saying, “Hopefully, Ipoh will maintain its slow-paced lifestyle and avoid being another town bustling with developments.”

The Sutra Foundation will tour South India next year. For more information, go to its website at www.sutrafoundation.org.my.

Theatre Through a Time Tunnel

By Joelyn Jonathan

Theatre through a time tunnel located inside a souvenir shop in Concubine Lane is the latest addition in exciting new venues in Old Town, Ipoh.

“I was working on a new tourist attraction spot at Jonker Street, Malacca, called the Ching Ho Cultural Museum when I visited Concubine Lane. I immediately fell in love with it. That’s how the idea of developing a theatre came about,” said Founder Kek Kee Boon.

Having years of experience in performing arts, Kee Boon decided to build a show house within Ipoh’s most famous landmark to allow Ipohites to experience a show, up close and personal.

While walking around the city, I realised that Ipoh’s entertainment business is dead after 6pm. So I decided to build something that offers night shows. I’ve always wanted a heritage site and a place filled with people. Concubine Lane met my expectations.” The time tunnel was built to create a nostalgic feeling for visitors,” he told Ipoh Echo after the grand opening on Friday, November 29.

Concubine Lane, said Kee Boon, provides a safe and cozy environment.

There are not many snatch thefts here unlike Jonker Street. And that’s definitely a plus point,” he remarked.

For the grand opening, a Teresa Teng tribute concert was held. The positive feedback received after the show prompted KeeBoon to have more shows.

“Next, I plan to do a ‘No Black Tie’ concept in Ipoh. ‘No Black Tie’ is one of the most successful jazz bars in Kuala Lumpur. The bar constantly hosts shows for artists from all around the world. Hence, I’ve planned to do something similar to it. This will give visitors a new exposure since not many are aware of what a ‘No Black Tie’ means.

Although the theatre looks small, it has the right amount of facilities. I’ll bring in my grand piano soon,” he said.

Upcoming shows will be Christmas themed and will be held at the end of December. Kee Boon hopes he will receive a similar response for his future shows.

If you are in Concubine Lane, drop by the iconic theatre for some magical close-up performances.

Nick Shen WeiJun

By Mei Kuan

I
poh Echo had an exclusive one-on-one with Nick Shen WeiJun, Singaporean actor, emcee, performer, founder of Tok Tok Chiang and troupe leader of Lao Sai Tao Yuan Teochew Opera Troupe, one of Singapore’s oldest opera troupes with 156 years of history.

He is currently filming in I poh and Trenoh since October for a Mediacorp English drama series, “Titoudao” by The Oak3 Films which is scheduled to be aired in February 2020.

“Titoudao” is a story about Singapore’s most famous Hokkien opera troupe, “Sin Sai Hong” with over 100 years of history. Coincidentally, I am acting as the troupe leader, Master Gwee Boon. He is a very strict master and will scold the artistes on stage,” he told I ph Echo on Friday, December 6.

Nick began his career in showbiz when he won both the All Asian Star Search Singapore and Star Awards Best Newcomer in 1999 after completing his acting course with MediaCorp, Singapore’s leading broadcasting company.

Whilst establishing his career as a media personality, Nick relentlessly pursues his passion for Chinese opera. In 2010, he founded Tok Tok Chiang Events Management, a Singapore-based company specialising in Chinese opera, cultural events and workshops. In 2014, Nick established Tok Tok Chiang Opera, a non-profit entity, as a platform to promote cultural appreciation in Singapore.

His versatility as a media personality and in Chinese opera has been well received. For instance, he is the first actor in Singapore to master the unique Chinese art of mask changing. Under the tutelage of China’s professional mask changing master, Li Shuimin for two years, Nick started performing mask changing since 2013. When asked about what sparked off his interest in Chinese opera, he shared, “My grandma used to bring me to watch Teochew street opera when I was a little boy. My grandfather used to be a drummer backstage of Lao Sai Tao Yuan Teochew Opera Troupe. I was fascinated by the costumes, painted faces and the fighting scenes. I wanted to be that brave warrior on stage.”

In 2014, Nick was awarded the Honourable Award for the Junior Chamber International (JCI) Ten Outstanding Young Persons of the World – Singapore for the cultural achievement category. He was the only winner selected from over 200 candidates, to represent Singapore in Germany to compete against other youths from more than 150 countries.

For the faculty member of the Singapore Media Academy also contributes to various charitable causes such as the Singapore Kindness Movement.

On his venture into the traditional performing art, he explained, “Chinese opera is not just about performance – it’s also about filial piety, it’s about how you can become a better person. It’s not a secret that local interest in Chinese opera has been declining over the years. The situation in Singapore has actually become rather dire. Old and established firms are slowly closing down. I feel very disheartened to see the actors getting older and the audience getting smaller. Our rich tradition, culture and history will disappear with the art, too.”

To make Chinese opera enticing to people especially the Singaporean youth, Nick has created a hybrid genre of traditional Chinese opera dance with western magic techniques. Performances are also conducted on stage in the respective Chinese dialects with English subtitles in order to overcome the language barrier.

“Tok Tok Chiang will be starting a Chinese opera basic workshop in Singapore in February 2020,” the amiable Nick added.

Here’s his advice for those who would like to pursue a career in Chinese opera: “There’s a Chinese saying, “One minute on stage takes ten years of hard work, perseverance and true passion’. Go through training by professional opera teachers and be more involved and engaged through film, drama, documentary and workshop. Gain more information from veterans and industry professionals.”

Having been to I ph countless times, he was spotted participating in the I ph Car Free Day back in November. “I find I ph to be a very peaceful city. I like the fat, juicy bean sprouts here and streetfood like steamed vegetable dumpling and laksa,” he enthused.

“One of my dreams is to create a cultural heritage restaurant displaying Chinese street opera puppets, costumes, instruments, props and pictures besides serving traditional Singapore Chinese food,” he mentioned towards the end of the interview.
